TENTS

QUICK TIPS

To choose wisely: Anticipate your needs, know your preferences.

What's your group size? Do you require lots of room? Capacity estimates shown in our chart assume a snug fit—upsized if space, not weight, is your priority.

How severe might conditions get? Convertible and 4-season tents are built to withstand snow loads and strong winds.

How can you maximize tent life? Follow care instructions. Never store a tent wet. Use a footprint.

Can't decide? Talk to a sales specialist or use the "Tent Finder" at REI.com. Find it by clicking "Camping & Hiking," then "Tent Finder" or "Tents."

MATCH YOUR TENT TO YOUR STYLE

When backpacking, you want to keep tent weight low, but without jeopardizing comfort or safety.

Individual views on comfort and weight, of course, can vary greatly. So REI divides core gear (bag, pack and tent) into four general categories. The goal: to help you build a gear system matched to your preferences.

Minimalist: Low weight overrides all other concerns (comfort, durability, convenience).

Ultralight: Gear for those willing to forego some conveniences to reduce pack weight.

Lightweight: Traditional gear redesigned with new-generation, low-weight materials.

Defuxe: For "maximalist" explorers who put a priority on comfort and convenience.

TYPES OF TENTS

Shelters: Tarps or netting made for ounce-counting minimalists. They're either a rain or bug barrier, but not both.

Bivy Sack: A waterproof barrier for your sleeping bag. Some are basic sacks; others offer pole-supported head space. Bivies save space and weight, but may feel confining.

Backpacking 3-Season: The most popular models; for people who like privacy and want a bugproof enclosure. Screened panels give you ventilation and stargazing options. Not built to handle heavy snow loads.

Convertible 3-4-Season: Designed to withstand 4-season conditions but can also be pitched in a lighter 3-season configuration by excluding pole sections or zip-off panels.

Mountaineering 4-Season: Can withstand high winds and snow loads. Rounded edges reduce snow accumulation; extra poles boost strength. Weatherproofness is the top priority.

Camping: A spacious shelter that may offer such luxuries as a porch, awning or separate rooms. An ideal base-camp headquarters. This group also includes sunshades and screens.

Single-wall: Used most often by minimalists and climbers. Lighter than traditional "2-wall" tents, they use sheltered ventilation panels to circulate air. Can be stuffy in humid climates.

LIVABILITY FEATURES

- Interior space is key; to get lots, seek tents engineered to optimize vertical side walls.
- Freestanding tents set up fast (since stakes are not required) and can be moved easily.
- Dual doors make access for 2 easier.
- Vestibules offer sheltered space for storing gear or cooking out of the elements.
- Gear attics and pockets minimize clutter.
- Rainfly vents reduce condensation buildup.
- Rainfly windows let light in, let you see out.

PREPARATION AND CARE

Practice setting up your new tent at home before you have to do it in the rain or at night by headlamp.

If your tent doesn't come with sealed seams, get seam sealer and apply it to ground-level seams before your first camping trip.

To avoid mildew, you must air/dry out your tent after use and brush out dirt. Store it in a cool, dry place—loosely, unpacked, under a bed, if possible, or loosely in its storage sack.

FOOTPRINTS

These custom groundcloths extend the life of your tent. Tent floors are tough, but rocks, twigs, grit and dirt eventually exact a toll: A footprint costs less to replace or repair.

Also, because footprints are sized to fit your tent shape exactly, they won't catch water like a generic groundcloth that sticks out beyond the floor edges. Water caught that way flows underneath and seeps through even tiny holes in the floor fabric.

FLY/FOOTPRINT PITCH OPTION

Some tents are designed to allow ultralight "fastpacking" where the footprint and rainfly can be pitched together without the tent body. It's a good reduced-weight option to have when conditions are predictable. Downside: Without a canopy, you're vulnerable to bugs.

SOME WORDS ABOUT WEIGHT

Minimum Weight: The total weight of body, rainfly and poles only: the bare essentials. You may pack more tent-related gear than this, but use this spec when comparing tent weights.

Packaged Weight: The total weight of all tent components: body, rainfly, poles, stakes, stuff sack, pole sack, instruction book and other items a manufacturer ships with a tent.
